

As reported in this week's International Financing Review (IFR), Latin America set the pace for emerging markets last week after Brazil and Colombia followed hot on the heels of Mexico with their own US$1bn 10-year benchmarks. But in a volatile market, analysing the risk and return across the region is more important than ever before making any strategic decisions.

Opportunities in: Latin American Finance is the first report of its kind to come out of Latin America, scrutinising the opportunities, risks, trends and issues facing capital and M&A markets in sixteen countries across the region. Hundreds of interviews were conducted with key articles written not only by IFR's specialised Latin American team but also by heads of public credit from Brazil, Mexico, and Uruguay, as well as top economists specialising in this highly complex region.

The report spotlights the drivers of ECM, DCM and M&A across the region and considers how these will continue to shape the market in coming years. It also highlights the changes to bond and loan structures brought about by the worsening conditions, offering practical information on how these can be made to work for both issuers and investors.

Aside from providing unique insight into both sovereign and corporate strategies, Latin America's key heads of public credit offer recipes for debt management success that will help define the region's pricing and new issuance dynamics over the coming years.

Opportunities in: Latin American Finance should be an essential read for anyone wanting more exposure in the region without losing the shirts on their backs.
